Her mother turns up the volume on the radio. An advertisement for a cauldron-cleaning potion blocks out Buster's yelling.

"Polly!" he shouts again, right at her window now, the rain wetting his fur. "Polly!"

Polly presses her lips together and her brow scrunches as she hears her best friend's voice turn from happiness to confusion.

"Polly?" he calls, more quietly this time.

But still she stares ahead, her heart small and hurting. Her mother looks approvingly at her.

A slow smile spreads over Winifred's face and she raises her eyebrows in disbelief. "Ha!" she says. "Who would have thought you could finally do something right for a change?"

Polly feels a deep burn of shame in her chest and her cheeks become hot. Her top lip curls and she glares at her sister. The right thing for you might not be the right thing for me! she thinks, and just as the lights change, Polly has an idea. Quickly, she draws a heart in her fogged-up window with a P at the top and a B at the bottom.
